Job Description

Assistant Cooperative Extension Specialist
Soil-Plant-Water-Relations/Deficit Irrigation, Department of Land, Air and Water Resources
University of California, Davis

The Department of Land, Air and Water Resources, internationally recognized as a premier center of excellence in research, teaching, and extension, is seeking applications for a Specialist in Cooperative Extension (CE) to join the faculty at the Assistant rank in the field of soil-plant-water-relations and irrigation management under water deficit conditions. This is a full time, career-track position. Cooperative Extension Specialists have many of the same career opportunities and rights and privileges as faculty in the professorial ranks but do not have classroom teaching responsibilities, freeing them to do extension education and applied research with partners throughout California. The successful candidate will be expected to 1) develop an extensive yet collaborative applied research and extension program that addresses irrigation management of agronomic, vegetable and horticultural crops in California in the context of sustained water scarcity and 2) to develop an extension education and outreach program that extends information to various clientele groups (e.g., growers, farm managers, consultants, water districts, and agencies) including under-represented groups.

Qualifications: Ph.D. degree in irrigation science, plant science, bio-hydrology, soil science, agricultural engineering, agronomy, horticulture or other closely related discipline is required. Additionally, knowledge, experience, interest and/or academic coursework related to plant-water-relations, soil science, irrigation management, crop-stress physiology, and remote sensing is highly desired. The successful candidate must have a record that documents productivity in research as evidenced by publications in peer-reviewed journals.

Appointment Date: This position is available on or soon after July 1st, 2018.

Applications: Applications should be submitted on-line at
